Advocating for a Strong Education Budget

Gov. Wolf will deliver his annual budget address on Feb. 4. We hope it will speak to the urgent needs facing Pennsylvania’s students, classrooms, and schools, as well as early childhood programs. Along with other members of the statewide PA Schools Work campaign, ELC continues to call on Pennsylvania officials to commit to major new investments in basic education, special education, and career and technical education.

ELC also joined with disability partners across the state in a letter asking the governor to propose significant, sustained increases in basic and special education funding. ELC’s advocacy for fair funding received radio, print, and television media coverage across the state, including from PBS39 in Bethlehem and WESA in Pittsburgh.

Training Advocates on Special Education Funding

ELC and The Arc of Pennsylvania led funding advocates across the state in a presentation and discussion about special education funding on Jan. 14. Sponsored by PA Schools Work, the webinar had about 100 attendees. You can listen to the archived webinar here or download the slide presentation.
What is Special Education Funding (SEF)?

State funding for specific programs and services to enable students with disabilities to better access the general education curriculum

- Premise: with appropriate supports, students with disabilities can and should be educated with non-disabled peers
- Provides school districts supplemental resources to basic ed funding to support students with disabilities
- Public schools must provide needed educational services to students at no cost to parents

Funding Needed to RemEDIATE Toxic Schools

ELC applauds one component of Gov. Wolf’s budget proposal announced in advance this week: a $1 billion grant fund for lead and asbestos remediation in schools. The state’s broken education funding system has left school districts across the state with aging facilities plagued with toxins – and lacking the resources to address the critical health concerns posed to students, parents, teachers, and staff.

We have joined with parents, students, educators, and legislators in urging the state’s General Assembly to provide emergency funding to address the school facilities crisis, including at a Harrisburg rally in December.

Update on School Funding Litigation

At a January 29 press briefing, attorneys from ELC and the Public Interest Law Center joined William Penn School District Superintendent Jane Ann
Harbert in updating reporters about the status of our landmark school funding case in PA Commonwealth Court. Discovery is nearing conclusion, and a trial is tentatively scheduled for fall 2020. Our presentations highlighted the profound level of education underfunding and inequity in the state.

The entrenched constitutional issues with Pennsylvania’s funding system will not be resolved by the kinds of incremental increases adopted in recent state budgets. We will continue to make the court and the public aware of the need for action to address the state’s inadequate and inequitable funding system.

Chester Upland Parents Want a Say in Recovery Plan

ELC, along with Public Interest Law Center, filed a petition to intervene on Jan. 31 in In Re: Appointment Of A Receiver For The Chester Upland School District, a case pending in the Delaware County Court of Common Pleas. ELC filed the petition on behalf of parents of students in Chester Upland School District and the Delaware County Advocacy and Resource Organization (DCARO), which advocates for parents and students with disabilities in the district.

The petition responds to a revised financial recovery plan that proposes conversion of all Chester Upland K-12 schools to charter schools. While the revised plan evaluates potential cost savings, it fails to consider whether the conversion will improve or imperil the education of students or how it will impact students with disabilities. Parents and students who will be directly affected currently lack any seat at the table. In addition, Chester’s largest existing charter school, Chester Community Charter School, exhibits lower achievement scores compared with district schools in math, English, and science. ELC is hopeful that intervention will be granted and parent voices heard.

Glen Mills Case Moves Forward

Our class action suit filed with Juvenile Law Center and Dechert LLP challenging horrific abuse and deprivation of education suffered by boys at Glen Mills Schools is now moving forward with discovery.
Following a recent favorable ruling where the U.S. district court denied nearly all of the multiple motions to dismiss filed by defendants, a scheduling order was issued this month setting deadlines for discovery and class certification.

Glen Mills Schools, a residential facility located in Delaware County, now faces increased pressure in the midst of multiple new individual lawsuits. We are hopeful that this next stage of the litigation will lead to meaningful remedies for the physical, emotional, and educational harm youth suffered, as well as robust statewide accountability by Pennsylvania’s agencies that are charged with ensuring the safety, well-being, and education of children and youth placed in residential facilities.

Supporting Students' Call for Adequate Mental Health Supports

ELC submitted written testimony to the School District of Philadelphia Board of Education on Jan. 30 in support of Youth United for Change’s “Mental Health Campaign Platform.” Our testimony highlights the importance of mental health services and the critical role the district plays in ensuring that schools across the city are healthy and supportive environments for all students and that schools connect youth to mental health services.

In Pittsburgh, Democratic Contenders Questioned on Education
Attorneys Cheryl Kleiman (left) and Hetal Dhagat joined with education justice advocates from across the country to hear from Democratic presidential candidates at the 2020 Presidential Public Education Forum in Pittsburgh. The candidates spoke on a range of key education equity issues facing students and public schools, including fair funding, students’ rights, and dismantling the school-to-prison pipeline. Special thanks to our partners at One PA and Education Rights Network who helped make our participation possible.
